Responding to Bad Customer Reviews

Running a business is hard work and running an auction business can be even harder work. Auction companies are always moving... new auctions are always happening, products need to be constantly inventoried and recorded, and shipping needs to happen quickly and efficiently. That's not all, don't even get us started on having to create or maintain an online presence! As you know, reviews are an important part of any business's online presence. Reviews showcase a small portion of who businesses are, but if you have any experience with them, you'll know the difficulty of keeping up with them. Not only that, but now there are multiple platforms for any company to receive reviews on! Google, Facebook, and your personal website are all places where you might receive a review or feedback from your customers and clients.
